THE RUSH OF RUNNING

By Bob Kempainen

LARRY MESTIN / COURTESY DARTMOUTH SPORTS INFORMATION

From a self-described “scrawny little kid” running seventh-grade cross-country, Kempainen went on to run for Dartmouth College (above) and in the 1992 Olympics.

Bob Kempainen was the 1990 U.S. National Cross-Country Champion. A 1988 graduate of Dartmouth College, where he was a three-time all-America selection, he ran high-school cross-country in Minnetonka, Minn. He went on to represent the United States on the 1992 Olympic marathon team. Now a medical student at the University of Minnesota, he has returned to the Upper Valley to train several times since his graduation from Dartmouth — most recently for an extended period this past summer.

If you're reading this, I probably don't have to tell you what a great sport cross-country running is. Certainly for all of the participants in this year's New England Cross-Country Championship, and probably for many of the coaches, spectators, and volunteers as well, if you've made it this far you have some idea of what draws people to running.

But in case you haven't quite figured it out yet, read on. Maybe a few reminiscences from one harrier will clue you in to the secret.

On the one hand, this sport is a total rush. There is that incredible sense of power and speed and freedom as you clip smoothly along over uneven ground, with the trees flying by in a blur. There is also the knowledge that you alone are in control of the outcome of the day's competition. This particular race for all of you is one of those special occasions when you're allowed to let all of your hard work, training, self-discipline, and natural ability shine through. This is your chance to reveal to yourself and to everyone else present at the event just what you can do.

At the same time, however, cross-country is a tough, gutsy sport. It demands that you make that difficult decision of whether to hang with the pack, or maybe with a teammate, or whether to make the bold move that will leave everyone else behind — even though you're already weary and breathless. It's a sport that requires you to dig deep down inside yourself to get over the top of the next hill so you can recover on the downside — only to do it all over again when you face the next climb. Then, of course, there is that last, draining, all-out push to the finish line.

Yes, it's grueling. But what a great feeling it is to cross the line knowing you've given it your all. That feeling of accomplishment and pride stays with you long after you've stopped shaking with fatigue or vomiting all over the person just ahead of you in the finish chute. And every one of you deserves to feel proud. Although only the top finishers today will have a chance to step up to the award stand, in reality the victory should be shared by every single one of you who pushed yourself to a new level of performance — regardless of the number you're handed at the end of the chute.

When I started out in running as a seventh-grader, I did all right for a scrawny little kid — but I wasn't the king of the hill either. I definitely have had my share of off days and disappointments. But I liked being on the team, I liked the camaraderie with the other runners, I liked to race, and most of all I liked the fact that I was getting a little bit better with each year that I ran.

It's that same desire to improve that still keeps me training and racing 14 years later. I never had the slightest idea, back when I went out for the team in seventh grade, that running would one day take me to state meets, to NCAA meets, to the cross-country nationals, to the Olympic trials, and, ultimately, to the Olympic games.

In the same way, you don't know where your own running might one day take you — but I sincerely hope that you allow yourself the chance to find out.

Good luck in today's race! ■
